PREFACE.

CLASSMATES. — At one time during the preparation of this Report, it seemed almost proper to make it the place for an exhibition of the just anger that the silence and apparent indifference of classmates provoked, and there were in manuscript several rods which the better judgment of Brother Hedge has for the present suspended. The half of the Class who have responded to the Secretary's appeal for information have his most hearty thanks: and it is remarkable, that nearly all the replies were received within a month from the date of the circular letter. Those at a distance have generally written, while some few in this city have not. With so few autograph communications, no apology is due for most of the mistakes which may be found. The Secretary has endeavored to incorporate in the Report such information as he had, both in the Class Book and in letters; but both sources have failed in some instances. Let those whose history is incorrect take more care to write to the Secretary.

It was hoped that a full and authentic list of all societies might be given; but in two cases no lists could be obtained, as the societies have ceased to exist, and often no lists have been kept, as in some of the musical societies and the boat-clubs. The Class of 1862 has done its part in the support of all social and literary organizations. One, the St. Paul's Religious Society, has been founded by Brother Fay. The "Ydel Cruth" was, however, declined by the members chosen, and the Harvard Temperance

Society expired during our Senior year. Since 1862, the Rumford Society has also become extinct.

The record of the Class on the water is full of interest. We have never been beaten, and the races we have won have added largely to the trophies in Harvard Hall. Music, too, has always been one of the excellences of the Class, and the College choir was largely composed of '62.

It is doubtless unnecessary to recall the various incidents in which '62 has "made its mark:" the ventilator of University Hall still serves as a reminder. If, however, we were lawless in College, we now most strongly support the law; and, of the twenty-four who intended to adopt that profession on graduating, twenty have done so. We are now distributed among the professions in the usual proportion.

Many have come and gone; but, while we were undergraduates, we lost but two of our number by death,—Carter and Gardner, who left us early in our course, almost before we knew them as classmates. Only seventy-three of the one hundred and nine whose names were on the first catalogue are now living graduates.

Since graduation, our losses have been many and heavy. Among the bravest and noblest of our number are our brothers, Burrage, Haven, Grafton, Parker, Ropes, Stone, Tucker. It was sweet to them to die for their country, and their memory will ever be dear to the Class of Sixty-two.

It would be pleasant to recall our College history as a Class; and, as the reminiscences come up at our future meetings, it may be done. Under the direction of three Presidents, our career has been varied certainly. The inauguration of President Felton and his death, the removal to the Appleton Chapel, the suppression of the foot-ball game, the building of the Gymnasium, the boat-races, drill-companies, and the guarding of the Arsenal, were all events of our time, worth remembering.

Of the statistics of the Class, little need be said. We had the tallest and the heaviest man in College during our Senior year; and most of the curious averages noted down by the athletic professor were largely in our favor as compared with the two preceding Classes.

We have lost from our number the senior member of our Class Committee, Brother Chapman; and Brother H. M. Rogers was chosen at our last meeting to fill the vacant place.

We have had our annual meeting at each Commencement since graduation, and the attendance has been large, and the interest in Class matters appears to increase with each additional year.

Our first Class Supper took place on Commencement evening, 1865.

The Class Subscription to the Alumni Hall Fund was in every way honorable to the Class. In less than one month from the time the circulars were issued to the members of the Class, the full amount of one thousand dollars was contributed, and Brother Hedge claimed, in behalf of the Class, the honor of being the first Class to respond with that amount to the appeal of the General Committee. The amount was immediately paid over to the Treasurer of the Alumni Hall Finance Committee.

We welcome the Class this year to a re-union, hoping that we may again and again repeat the custom which has been bequeathed to us by so many Harvard classes, and that each year our meetings may be pleasanter than ever before.

HARVARD COLLEGE.

CLASS OF 1862.

ARTHUR AMORY was born on the 6th of February, 1841, at Boston, Mass. Son of J. S. and Mary Copley (Greene) Amory. Fitted for College with Mr. Epes S. Dixwell. In 1860, visited Greenland with a scientific expedition from Williams College. In September, 1863, Amory went to New York, to engage in the dry-goods commission business, as salesman with Messrs. Slade & Colby. He remained there three years, and then became a partner in the house of Messrs. Upham, Tucker, & Co. On the 6th of June, 1866, he was married, in Philadelphia, to Miss E. W. Ingersoll, daughter of Charles Ingersoll, Esq., of that city. In March, 1867, he made the round trip to Cuba.

* CHARLES CARROLL BALCH, son of William and —— (Stone) Balch, was the youngest of eleven children, and was born at Newburyport, Mass., on the 9th of May, 1841. After attending the usual course at the public schools of that city, he fitted for College in the Brown High School. His intention of coming to College was formed only a year before it was realized.

Hardly a year passed after our last Commencement, when the news came of Balch's death: the following letter will describe the event. It was in reply to the Class resolutions of sympathy and sorrow.

Newburyport, Nov. 28, 1863.

. . . On the 27th of August, 1863, young Balch, with his brothers and sisters, and a few intimate friends, — the party numbering in all about eighteen persons, — sailed to Salisbury Beach, for a day's pleasure-trip. As it was our first water excursion during the summer, the surf-bath, in which nearly all the party joined, was the first salt-water bath of the year to most of us, young Balch being among them. He had spent the summer in an office in Boston, and had come down only three days before for a short vacation. On that day, he was apparently as well as usual, though not quite so strong as last year. While preparing for the bath, however, he spoke of a slight headache, but evidently considered it a very trifling matter. It was very near the lowest tide when we went in; the water being not unusually cold, nor the surf high. Balch was an excellent swimmer, and very fond of the surf; and, in order to get among the largest breakers, went a short distance from the main party, in company with his nephew, William Balch, a lad of about sixteen years.

For some time, they swam about in shoal water, when his companion, calling out, as they swam to the beach, that he was going to join the main party, left him, expecting he would soon follow. The absence of one of a party so large, and naturally scattered along the beach, was not noticed; and no one missed him until some ten or fifteen minutes after, when it caused some surprise that he did not return to dress. Even then it was supposed that he was with the bathers last to come out, somewhere on the beach. In a short time, his non-appearance gave us some anxiety, and we ran out on the beach in search of him. In vain we searched and inquired, and even examined the shoals for some distance. Nothing was known of him after his nephew left him, as I stated above; and it is impossible to explain the mystery of his death. Inasmuch as his remains were found fourteen days afterwards, not far from where he was last seen, it is generally supposed that he was overcome by a sudden paralysis, which rendered him unable either to help himself, or call for help, and so left him an easy prey to the hungry waves. For two weeks, all efforts to recover the body were fruitless; and, when found, it could with difficulty be identified.

It was a terrible blow to us all, that one so young, so promising, and so generally loved, should be thus ruthlessly cut down. In behalf of Mr. and Mrs. Baleh, his bereaved parents, and his large circle of mourning brothers and sisters, I gratefully thank you, as the representative of your Class, for your kind expression of sorrow and sympathy. Respectfully yours,

C. M. Woodward.

MURRAY ROBERTS BALLOU, son of Maturin M. and Mary A. A. (Roberts) Ballou, was born on the 21st of July, 1840, in Boston. At the age of twelve, Ballou entered Mr. Epes S. Dixwell's school, where he remained two years; after this, the Rev. Luther Farnham and Sidney Willard, Esq., were successively his tutors. After graduating, Ballou went into the business of broker, in partnership with Mifflin. December 1, 1863, he married Lucretia B. Howland, of New Bedford, Mass. March 12, 1865, a son, Maturin Howland Ballou, was born, to whom was duly presented the Class-cradle of 1862. October 1, 1866, Elise Murray Ballou was born.

LUTHER GUSTAVUS BARRETT, son of Luther G. and Margarett (Ridley) Barrett, was born at Watertown, Mass., December 5, 1838. Part of his early life was passed at Sturbridge. In the autumn of 1862, he entered the Newton Theological Institution, and graduated in June, 1865. In September, he was ordained as minister of the gospel, at Watertown, brother Lecompte taking part in the services. Owing to ill health, however, Barrett was obliged to give up his profession for a time, and went to the South in the winter of 1865–66. In May, he left Boston for Europe; sailing up the Mediterranean, visiting Gibraltar, Southern France, Italy, Switzerland, Southern Germany, and the Rhine, Paris, and England. He also spent nearly two months in the Army of the James, in the spring of 1865, in the service of the Christian Commission.

WILLIAM FRANCIS BARTLETT, son of Charles Leonard and Harriet (Plummer) Bartlett, was born at Haverhill, Mass., June 6, 1840. Fitted for College at the private school of Mr. W. H. Brooks, in Boston. April 17, 1861, he enlisted as private, 4th Battalion, Massachusetts Volunteer Militia. On the 10th of July, he was commissioned captain of the 20th Massachusetts; November 10, 1862, colonel of the 49th Massachusetts; August 17, 1863, colonel of the 57th Massachusetts; June 22, 1864, brigadier-general United-States Volunteers; brevet major-general, from March 13, 1865. Resigned July 16, 1866. October 14, 1865, he married Agnes Pomeroy, daughter of Robert Pomeroy, Esq., of Pittsfield, Mass. In the spring of 1866, he was in Europe, and returned in June. A daughter, Agnes, was born September 16, 1866.

JAMES VILA BLAKE, son of Hamlin and Elizabeth (Dexter) Blake, was born in Brooklyn, N.Y., January 21, 1842. When twelve or thirteen years old, Blake visited Europe with his whole family. He completed his preparatory studies at the Brooklyn Collegiate and Polytechnic Institute, and entered the Sophomore Class in 1859. He received a Boylston prize for elocution. On graduating, he entered the Cambridge Divinity School; and, on completing the course there, was ordained and settled at Haverhill, Mass., in the spring of 1867.

* EDWARD CARSON BOWMAN was born March 20, 1841, in Dadeville, Ala. His father's death, and his mother's removal to Massachusetts, took place before Bowman was five years old. In 1851, he sailed from New York, in the "Flying Cloud," for San Francisco; making the voyage in eighty-nine days. In 1855, he returned by way of Panama, and entered the Chauncy-Hall School, where he obtained two gold medals. Soon after graduation, Bowman entered the United-States Navy as acting assistant paymaster. He was attached to the United-States steamer "Virginia" in 1864, and died the 17th of October, at New Orleans, of yellow fever. (See Harvard Memorial Biographies.)

CHARLES BOYDEN, son of Dwight and Maria A. (Whiting) Boyden, was born in Waltham, Mass., October 7, 1840. Fitted for College at the Chauncy-Hall School, and with Mr. Joseph Willard. In the fall of 1862, he was a resident graduate at Cambridge; and, in December, sailed from New York for Europe. Returning in the spring of 1865, he soon after went to Nevada, to superintend silver mines.

SOLOMON HOYT BRACKETT, son of Josiah P. and Susan (Edmands) Brackett, was born on the 25th of September, 1838, in Framingham, Mass. Fitted at Phillips Exeter Academy, and entered College the Sophomore year. Since graduating, he has been teaching school at Provincetown, Mass.

WILLIAM TUFTS BRIGHAM was born in Boston, May 24, 1841. Son of William (H. C. 1829) and Margaret A. (Brooks) Brigham, of that city. Fitted for College at the Boston Latin school. After graduation, he studied law in his father's office for eighteen months, and then started for San Francisco, where he was joined by Mr. Horace Mann; and after exploring the mines of Washoe, and some of the hot springs of California and Nevada, they sailed for the Hawaiian Islands, where they arrived in May, 1864. Being favorably received by His Majesty Kamehameha V., and the other magnates of the Kanaka Mokuaupuni, they commenced a scientific exploration of the Islands. Six months after, Brigham was appointed Professor of Natural Sciences in Oahu College, where he established his abode, sitting literally under his own vine and fig-tree, with a castor-oil bean and an india-rubber tree for additional shade. While teaching the young of both sexes, various colors, and diverse ages, he continued his scientific collections; and after being nearly burned up while sleeping on the brink of the largest active volcano in the world, frozen on the top of a mountain 14,000 feet high, and drowned while fishing for coral, he left these lovely islands, which he declares must have been the site of Adam's garden, sailing for Hong Kong in October, 1865. Spending five weeks in China, studying ye manners and customs, he went to Singapore, thence to Chittagong and Akyab. From Arracan, Brigham hurried home through India, up the Red Sea, over the Pyramids, eying Cleopatra's Needle, and resting on Pompey's Pillow. Coasting Crete, he landed at Brundusium, and so on through Italy, Switzerland, France, and England, to Boston, where he is continuing the study of law. He is not yet married, and we fear he will not be for some time to come. At present, he is publishing a long report of his geological explorations in the Hawaiian Islands.

He is a member of the Boston Society of Natural History, Institute of Technology, corresponding member of the California Academy of Sciences, and of the Philadelphia Academy of Natural Sciences, and was commissioned justice of the peace January 1, 1867, by Governor Bullock.

* JOSEPH PERRIN BURRAGE, son of Joseph and Frances Sophia (Perrin) Burrage, was born May 4, 1842, in Boston. Kitted for College at Phillips Academy, Andover, graduating there with the second English oration. During his College life, he resided at home, at West Cambridge, walking daily to and from the Colleges. May 18, 1863, he was commissioned second lieutenant in the 33d Massachusetts Volunteers, Company E. He was killed October 29, at the battle of Lookout Mountain. (See the "Memorial" by Rev. Daniel R. Cady, published by Gould & Lincoln, Boston, and Harvard Memorial Biographies.)

CLARK CARTER, son of Elisha and Harriet (Wilson) Carter, was born in Boston, October 16, 1841. Fitted for College with Mr. T. D. Adams, at Framingham, Mass. In the spring of 1858, Carter joined the Orthodox Church in that town. During the Junior winter vacation, he taught school in Charlton, Mass.

On the 1st of September, 1862, he sailed from New York for Port Royal, where he remained in Government employ as Superintendent of Abandoned Plantations, under General Saxton, until April 1, 1864. In September, entered the Theological Seminary at Princeton, spending the long summer vacation of 1865 at Port Royal, Charleston, and the Sea Islands, investigating the condition of the freedmen, under the auspices of the Pennsylvania Freedmen's Relief Association. May 15, 1866, Carter was licensed to preach the gospel by the Pilgrim Association of Ministers at Plymouth; and, on the 1st of October, entered the Theological Institute of Hartford, Conn., where he completed his preparatory studies in June, 1867.

WILLIAM HOBBS CHADBOURN, son of George and Asenath (Hobbs) Chadbourn, was born in Sanford, Me., February 18, 1841. Entered College from the Boston Latin School. Soon after graduating, he became a clerk with Messrs. Jordan & Marsh. May 31, 1863, he was married at the Warren-street Universalist Church, to Miss —— Peters. In July, 1864, he became travelling agent for his employers.

The next year, he was a cotton broker at Nashville, Tenn., where he now is.

THOMAS LINCOLN CHADBOURNE was born on the 13th of April, 1841, at Eastport, Me. Son of I. R. and Hannah (Lincoln) Chadbourne. Was at the Boston Latin School for nine months, and then studied at Eastport. Chadbourne was chosen one of the Class marshals; and, since graduating, has been practising law in Upper Michigan.

* GEORGE EDWIN CHAPMAN, son of Edmund A. and Harriet (Brown) Chapman, "was born in Cambridge, Thursday, Oct. 29, 1840. Between the ages of five and ten, attended a private school, under Miss Lucy Sessions. Entered Washington Grammar School in 1850; Cambridge High School, September, 1853.

"Living in Cambridge, I have had the College always before me, and my early prejudices were not at all favorable to the time-honored institution. 'During the first half of this century,' the students were continually at war with the townspeople; for Cambridge had not yet reached the dignity of a city and an efficient police (the 'infant' being, in an official sense, yet unborn). Concerts and lectures were generally the scenes of disturbance, where the students were sometimes passed out of the hall by a line of indignant citizens, in the same way that water-buckets are passed from hand to hand at a fire in a country village. At night, door-bells were rung, windows broken, haystacks burned, gates carried off, the signs of sober tradesmen ludicrously exchanged, and the slumbers of innocence disturbed by the shouts of sheet-clad spirits. The citizens were sometimes obliged to patrol the streets. I had no friends among the students; and, in my eyes, they were all, of necessity, conceited fops or rowdies.

I remember that I always repelled with indignation any mention of the bare possibility of my going to College. But, as I became older, students became more and more, in character, the gentlemen they always claim to be. A cousin entered, and I saw the other side of the subject. I began to say to myself, What shall I do if I don't go to College? Of twenty-eight boys who commenced with me at the High School, I was the only one who entered College; being admitted in September, 1858. In College, I have received a Detur; have had the privilege, at two exhibitions, of borrowing a gown, and helping to pay the Pierian Sodality for their services. As an editor for the Senior year, have assisted in prolonging the existence of the 'Harvard Magazine,' and have become a member of the Φ B K and the O. K."

In the summer of 1862, Chapman sailed for Europe, apparently in good health, and, after travelling through Great Britain, took up his residence at Göttingen, attending the lectures at the University for several months, when his failing health induced him to travel in Switzerland. Obtaining there no relief, he decided to return home. He arrived in June, 1863, and remained in Cambridge until the following spring, when he went to Minnesota, hoping to find the climate beneficial, but was again disappointed. He returned home, and died on the 3d of February, 1865. A number of classmates followed his remains to Mount Auburn.

At the Class meeting on July 19, 1865, the following resolves were passed: —

"Whereas it has pleased the Supreme Disposer of events to take to himself our beloved classmate, George Edwin Chapman; therefore —

"Resolved, That in his death we mourn the loss of one whose pre-eminently pure life, whose rare abilities, modestly veiled under a quiet and unostentatious manner, whose manly and Christian example, have left their impress on our hearts, although we fail to portray them in words.

"That, in this dispensation, we are again reminded that death, by a providence to us mysterious, is demanding, among our earliest sacrifices, many of those whom we had learned most dearly to love, and who held out the brightest promise for future influence and usefulness.

"That to the widowed mother and to the brother and sister of the deceased, though loath to intrude upon the sacredness of the sorrow peculiar to the family circle, we tender our heartfelt sympathy in their sad bereavement."

JAMES GILMAN COLE, son of John Greenleaf and Lavinia (Brooks) Cole, was born in Woburn, Mass., March 9, 1841. In July, 1863, he was a Superintendent of Plantations at Port Royal, S.C., and was there when last heard from, in 1866.

CHARLES JEROME COLEMAN. [No life in the Class Book.] After graduating, he went into business in Cincinnati. April 8, 1863, he married Julia H. Raynor, youngest daughter of Henry Raynor, Esq., of Syracuse, N.Y. April 29, 1865, a son was born. Summer of 1866, another son, Gilbert Payson Coleman, was born.

THOMAS BUCKMINSTER CURTIS, son of Thomas B. and Laura (Greenough) Curtis. In 1851, Curtis went to Europe, and studied for four years in Vevay, in Switzerland, in company with classmates Gardner and Mason. Fitted for College with Mr. T. S. Bradford, in Boston. In 1861 he spent the summer vacation in Europe. November, 1862, he went to Paris, and was for some time in Greenough's studio. Since July, 1864, he has been studying medicine in that city with great success.

BEN MAJOR DAVENPORT, son of William and Eliza Ann (Major) Davenport, was born in Woodford

Co., Ill., July 12, 1837. Fitted for College at the Walnut Grove Academy, in his native State, and with Mr. Joseph Willard, in Boston. In March, 1859, he was admitted to the Sophomore Class with some conditions, but preferred the Freshman Class free. When he graduated, he said he was going "to study law out West." Nothing has been heard from him since.

ALBERT EDWIN DAVIS, son of Ansel and Caroline M. (Scott) Davis, was born in Westford, Mass., December 23, 1839. Fitted for College at Westford Academy. After graduating, he taught school mostly at Westford, Mass., where he was when last heard from (July, 1866).

JOHN RICHARD DENNETT, son of John Richard and ——— (Dalton) Dennett, was born in Chatham, N.B., November 5 (Monday), 1838, at 3, A.M. Attended the schools of Woburn, Mass. July, 1862, he was a Superintendent of Plantations at Port Royal, where he remained until March, 1865, when he entered the Law School, Cambridge. Since 1865, he has been travelling correspondent of "The Nation."

JOHN HOAG DILLINGHAM, son of Abram and Lydia B. (Hoag) Dillingham, was born in West Falmouth, Mass., June 1, 1839. Fitted at the Falmouth Academy. Soon after graduating, he was employed as assistant of C. A. Miles, in his Family School for Boys, at Brattleboro', Vt., where he remained two years and a half. Passed the summer of 1865 mostly in Cambridge as proctor and private tutor, commencing the study of law. Being called to be Assistant Professor of Latin and Greek, and Librarian, in Haverford College, he entered upon his duties there in September, 1865. At the close of the first term of his residence at Haverford, he was appointed superintendent of the College

(January, 1866), a position which he still holds, continuing his duties of instruction as from the first.

CHARLES TROWBRIDGE DWIGHT, son of William and —— (White) Dwight, was born in Boston, May 6, 1842. Fitted for College with Mr. S. F. Smith. In 1861, he left the Class, and entered the army. He was second lieutenant in Company D of the 70th New-York Volunteers (Sickles Brigade). At the second battle of Bull Run, he was taken prisoner, and confined in Libby Prison more than three months. After the battle of Fredericksburg, he went to Louisiana, on the staff of General William Dwight, where he remained until obliged by ill-health to resign. October 18, 1865, he married Marianne H. Welch, daughter of Francis W. Welch, of Roxbury. He resides in Brookline, and does business as banker and broker in Boston.

ALBERT WILLIAM EDMANDS, son of William Murray and Martha Adams (Tapley) Edmands, born in Charlestown, Mass., September 9, 1840. Fitted for College at the Charlestown High School. In 1862, he was orderly sergeant of Co. A, 44th Regiment Massachusetts Infantry. In July, 1864, he was in business in New York. In January, 1865, he was cashier of the Bunker Hill Bank, Charlestown, Mass., where he is now to be found.

JOHN HARVARD ELLIS, son of Rev. George E. and Elizabeth B. (Eager) Ellis, born in Charlestown, on Saturday, January 9, 1841. All his preparatory studies were conducted by his father at home, until 1857, when he attended a private school in Cambridge for one year. In April, 1860, he became one of the early members of the "Boston Numismatic Society." On the 17th of September, 1862, Ellis became a law student in the office of Francis E. Parker, Esq., in Boston. In March, entered the Cambridge Law School, receiving his degree in July, 1864. October 4, 1865, he was admitted to the bar; and in April, 1867, opened an office for the practice of law. For some time he has been engaged in editing the poems, and other works, of Mrs. Anne Bradstreet, which are now published in a most attractive dress.

EDWARD ELI ENSIGN, son of Edward F. and Jane (Dewey) Ensign, born at Sheffield, Berkshire County, Mass., September 29, 1841. Studied at the schools in his native town, and finally at Stockbridge. At the close of the Senior year, Ensign expressed a preference for civil engineering. September 12, 1862, he enlisted in the 49th Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers. In January, went with the regiment to Louisiana, under General Banks; returned, and was mustered out in September, 1863. In November, he entered the Dane Law School, and received his LL.B. in due course. In February, 1865, was admitted to the Suffolk Bar, and immediately went to New York, where he read law in the office of Messrs. Martin & Smith for a year, when he was admitted to the New-York Bar. In April, 1866, he joined the firm of G. F. Devereux & Co., of Davenport, Iowa, commission merchants in railroad supplies. Ensign is now attending to a branch of the business at Richland City, Wisconsin.

HERCULES WARREN FAY, son of Josiah and Mary W. (Warren) Fay, born in Westboro', Mass., March 17, 1841. Fitted for College with Mr. W. F. Allen, at West Newton, Mass. During his College course, Fay founded the "St. Paul's Religious Society," and was twice its president. He was for a time a resident graduate, and then entered the Episcopal Theological School in New York. Ordained deacon, July 2, 1865; priest, Nov. 21, 1865. Rector at Flatbush, L.I. Resigned in January, 1867, on account of ill health.

GEORGE ALFRED FISKE, son of George A. and Sarah W. (Clapp) Fiske, born Saturday, August 14, 1841, at Boston. In 1849 he removed to Roxbury. Fitted for College at the Channey-Hall School, where he received several gold and silver medals. After graduation, Fiske had some thought of studying civil engineering, but enlisted as private in the 41st Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers, September 29, 1862. On December 13, he was commissioned as second lieutenant, and ordered to report to General George L. Andrews as aide-de-camp on his staff, and with him went to New Orleans. He was present at the siege of Port Hudson, and, after the surrender of that place, did garrison duty there. October 27, 1863, he was commissioned first lieutenant; and in April, 1864, visited the North on account of ill health. July 12, he was mustered into the United-States Army as paymaster, with the rank of major, and ordered to New Orleans. Resigned, October 1, 1864, owing to ill health.

In February, 1866, Fiske sailed for the Azores, where he remained until the 1st of June. On his return, was for some time in business with his father at Bristol Ferry, R.I.; and in February, 1867, entered the office of the Merchants Union Express Company, at Boston, where he is now.

SAMUEL EATON FITZ, son of Jeremiah and Hannah (Eaton) Fitz, born in Boston, January 26, 1836. Fitted at the High School in Chelsea. In the fall of 1862, he entered the Newton Theological Institution, where he remained until May, 1864, when he entered the service of the United-States Christian Commission, in the Army of the Potomac; afterwards as agent at Richmond, Va. In August, 1865, he returned to Newton, and completed the three years' course, June, 1866. Since then he has been "in the pursuit of health."

GEORGE ALBERT FLETCHER, son of Timothy and Sarah P. (Adams) Fletcher, born in Boston, March 7, 1842. Fitted for College, with Mr. Edwin Clapp, at Milton. 1862 and 1863, he was sergeant in the Massachusetts 38th, under General Banks, in Louisiana; in 1864, second lieutenant in the 56th Massachusetts (veterans). He was promoted in July, and on January 4, 1865, discharged for disability contracted in the service. April 3, 1865, he was commissioned a captain in the same regiment. July, 1866, he was in business in Boston.

CHARLES FOLLEN FOLSOM, son of Rev. Nathaniel Smith and Ann Wendell (Penhallow) Folsom, born in Haverhill, Mass., April 3, 1842. Moved to Charlestown, Mass., in 1846; to Meadville, Penn., in 1849; in October, 1861, to Jamaica Plain; and, in 1862, to Concord. In 1857, Folsom entered Phillips Exeter Academy. During his College life, he received a goodly share of academic honors. June 23, 1862, he was appointed Superintendent of Plantations, and, July 1, stationed at Port Royal Ferry, S.C., under General Saxton. March, 1863, resigned, and undertook raising cotton on three plantations, on St. Helena Island, for two years. June, 1863, appointed by General Saxton to serve on the Plantation Commission, to try civil cases. February, 1865, appointed Assistant General Superintendent of Freedmen and Abandoned Lands, and stationed at Edisto Island. In April, he was appointed general superintendent, and stationed at Georgetown. In May, he declined an appointment as assistant agent of the Treasury Department at Columbia, S.C. July 1, resigned, and returned to Boston, commencing the study of medicine. In October, sailed for San Francisco, around Cape Horn, for his health, returning before the mast. In September, 1856, resumed his studies, under Professor J. Wyman.

SHEPARD DEVEREUX GILBERT, son of Samuel Shepard and Sarah Crowninshield (Devereux) Gilbert, born in Boston, July 28, 1840. Entered College from the Boston Latin School. Since graduation, he has been at Port Royal, as superintendent and owner of plantations.

FRANCIS WEBSTER GOSS, son of Ezekiel and Almira D. (Hatch) Goss, born in Salem, Mass., July 3, 1842. Fitted for College in the High School of his native city. In 1863, he was a teacher; from 1864 to 1865, a teacher, at Newport, R.I.; he then entered the Harvard Medical School, where he is now studying medicine.

* JAMES INGERSOLL GRAFTON, son of Major Joseph Grafton, of the United-States Army. His mother was Maria (Gurley) Grafton. He was born in Boston, June 16, 1841, where he studied with William P. Field, Esq., and was afterwards fitted for College at Nazareth, Penn. He left College November 1, 1861, to accept a commission as second lieutenant in the 2d Regiment, Massachusetts Volunteers, and was promoted captain November 9, 1862. At the battle of Cedar Mountain, he was badly wounded in the head, but, after several months' relief from duty, rejoined his regiment. At Chancellorsville, he was again severely wounded. He was with his regiment during Sherman's famous march, and was killed in battle at Averysborough, N.C., on March 16, 1865.

At the annual meeting of the Class, held at Cambridge, on Commencement Day, July 19, 1865, the Secretary having announced the death of brother James Ingersoll Grafton, who fell in battle near Averysborough, N.C., March 16, 1865, the following resolutions were passed by the Class: —

"Whereas, at the very close of the war, in the very hour of victory, James Ingersoll Grafton has been taken from us by that Providence whose power is infinite, whose purposes are unfathomable; —

"Resolved, That, in his military career, we have seen those manly qualities of character developed, of which we saw the promise when he was with us.

"Warm-hearted and generous, brave almost to recklessness, he displayed, during many arduous campaigns, an endurance, a fortitude, a cheerful, patient valor, which won the esteem and confidence of all with whom he was associated.

"In the manner of his death, we see the same strong will and steadfast devotion to duty which always distinguished him.

"To the family which has been stricken with this great loss at the hour of the country's rejoicing, we offer our tenderest sympathies.

CHARLES EZRA GREEN, son of the Hon. J. D. and Sarah A. (Durell) Green, of Cambridge, was born in that city, February 12, 1842. He fitted for College at the Cambridge High School and Phillips Exeter Academy. After graduation, he went to Milbury, Mass., and engaged in the manufacture of rifles, thence to Worcester, in the same business, until November, 1863. In February, 1864, Green went to Readville, as clerk in the depot quartermaster's department, and remained until October; was mustered into United-States service, on January 5, 1865, as first lieutenant, 7th United-States Colored Troops, and joined the regiment in the field before Richmond, Va., as regimental quartermaster. Marched to Appomattox Court House, in April, 1865; thence back to Petersburg and City Point; embarked for Texas, May 25th; landed at Indianola, Texas, June 25th; performed garrison duty, &c., at that place, Port Lavaca, Victoria, and Goliad; discharged, on resignation, August 13, 1866; entered the Massachusetts Institute of Technology at Boston, October 1, 1866, and is there pursuing a course of study in civil engineering.

JAMES GREEN, son of James Green, born at Worcester, March 4, 1841. Fitted for College at the schools of his native city. After leaving College, he entered the office of Messrs. Foster & Nelson, in Worcester, and devoted himself to the study of law, which had long been his choice. In March, 1863, he entered the Dane Law School. At this time he was appointed proctor, and assigned to the "Brattle House," where he kept guard eighteen months. In July, 1864, Green took his LL.B., and read law with Messrs. Miller, Peet, & Nichols, of New York. At the general term of the Supreme Court of the State of New York, held in May, 1865, he was admitted to the New-York Bar. Owing to ill health, most of the next year was spent in travelling in the Western States. In September, 1866, he was admitted to the Massachusetts Bar, and since that date has been practising in Worcester. He writes: "You ask what public offices I have held. Modesty almost forbids my telling how His Excellency Governor Bullock confided in my ability, discretion, and integrity, and constituted me one of our justices of the peace; enjoining me to cause to be kept the laws and ordinances made for the good of the peace, and for the quiet rule and government of our citizens and subjects in our county. I hardly dare to add, that the sovereign people of our ward have unanimously called me to the office of ward clerk, for which the salary, in quiet times, amounts to nine dollars per year."

CHARLES EDWARD GRINNELL, son of C. A. and Anna Almy (Cobb) Grinnell, was born in Baltimore, Md., May 7, 1841. In 1854, Grinnell entered the "University of Maryland School of Letters and Sciences," where he obtained three silver medals as prizes for Latin, German, and mathematics. In 1857, he went to the boarding-school of Mr. John Prentiss. In the winter of 1858, he joined the Associate Reformed Church. The first two years after graduation, he spent in New Haven, Conn., as a student of theology, in the Divinity School of Yale College. The following year, he returned to Cambridge, and entered the Senior Class in the Divinity School there, graduating July 18, 1865. On the 11th of July, Grinnell married Elizabeth Tucker Washburn, daughter of W. R. P. Washburn, Esq., of Boston; and, on the 19th, sailed for Liverpool with his wife. He spent eleven months in Göttingen, a student of theology in the University. While there, "on June 30, 1866, a manchild was born to us. His name is Charles Washburn Grinnell. He can whip his weight." After visiting various parts of England, Scotland, France, Switzerland, and Germany, he returned to Boston, October 24, 1866, where he remained two or three months, preaching on Sundays. On January 22, 1867, he accepted a call to become the pastor of the First Unitarian Church in Lowell, Mass., and, on February 19, was ordained. He is now settled, with his family, in Lowell.

* SAMUEL CUSHMAN HAVEN was born in Nauvoo, Ill., February 19, 1843. At the age of thirteen, he entered Phillips Exeter Academy, and joined the Class of 1862 in the Sophomore year. During his College course, his rank entitled him to a Detur, and an election into the Φ B K Society. On the breaking-out of the rebellion, Haven was one of the students who volunteered to guard the Cambridge Arsenal. His part, on Commencement, was an essay on "Spectrum Analysis;" a subject quite consonant with his scientific tastes. He had hoped to become a physician, but postponed his studies to serve his country, and, immediately after graduation, was commissioned as second lieutenant in the 162d Regiment New-York Volunteer Militia, under General Banks. In February, 1863, he was promoted to a first-lieutenancy. On the 15th of June, he was obliged to leave his regiment, then before Port Hudson, to go to the hospital at Baton Rouge, where he died of diphtheria on the 25th of June, 1863.

Extract from a letter of Dr. S. H. Towle, surgeon in charge at Baton Rouge.

"Four or five days before his decease, he came to the conclusion himself that his life was in danger, and I could not deny to him that the prospect of recovery was small; but he manifested no trepidation at the prospect of death. Life, he said, was to him a good and desirable thing; he had cherished hopes of doing something in the future worth the doing; he had dear friends he would see again, and especially he would live to be a comfort to the declining years of his mother, and a guardian, in part, to his brother. But, for all that, if it was God's will that his life should end thus early, he would not repine, but look forward to a future state of existence for development he could not obtain here.

"After death, all traces of his sufferings faded from his countenance, which assumed a most beautiful, tranquil expression. He was not much emaciated; and, as he lay ready for the grave, no one could have thought him aught but calmly sleeping."

Before Port Hudson, June 27, 1863.

Lieutenant, — The above is a copy of a letter received by me this afternoon, and I address you because I have not the address of Lieutenant Haven's family. I beg to assure you of the sincere regret the intelligence has given me, and of the high estimation in which I held my deceased friend.

Colonel Benedict desires me to say, that the 162d Regiment has, in his opinion, lost one of its very best and most faithful officers, — one whom he had recommended for promotion, and whose place cannot be filled. The late Lieutenant Haven's conduct as an officer, and bearing as a gentleman, have, ever since the formation of the regiment, met the colonel's unqualified approval. He begs you to assure his friends, that he sympathizes with them in the grief his loss will excite.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ROBERT N. LEONARD, Adjutant.

Lieut. WILLIAM HAVEN, 16th N.H. Vols.

On the announcement of Haven's death, the following resolutions were passed by his Class: —

"Whereas Samuel Cushman Haven, first lieutenant in the 162d Regiment New-York Volunteer Militia, has fallen in the service of his country; —

"Therefore his classmates desire to pay their poor tribute of respect to his memory. While with them, his brilliant talents not only brought to him a full share of collegiate honors, but commanded the respect of his classmates; while his tender regard for the wishes of others, his quiet modesty, and unflinching courage, must always claim for his memory the affection of all who knew him.

"While they respectfully join in the grief of his family, they are proud that he died in the service of his country.

"Resolved, That these expressions of our esteem be communicated to his family."

MAYO WILLIAMSON HAZELTINE, son of Mayo and Frances A. (Williamson) Hazeltine, was born April 24, 1841, in Boston. After graduating, he spent some time in England, at the University of Oxford, and is now practising law in New York, in partnership with Washburn.

WILLIAM HEDGE, son of Thomas and Lydia (Goodwin) Hedge, was born at Plymouth, Mass., February 26, 1840. He attended the various schools of his native town until September, 1855, when he entered the Boston Latin School, and was there fitted for the College Examination in 1858. He was one of the Class crew while in College. After graduation, in July, 1862, he enlisted as corporal in Company C, 44th Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers. The regiment left the camp at Readville in October, and proceeded by steamer to North Carolina, where it served its term of service in the army corps of Major-General J. G. Foster, participating in the battles of Rawle's Mills, Kingston, Whitehall, Goldsboro', and the siege of Little Washington. In January, 1863, he was elected first lieutenant by the company, and returned, and was mustered out, with the regiment, in the summer of 1863. The next fall, he began the study of law in the office of Messrs. Whiting & Russell, No. 35, Court Street, Boston; taking, in connection therewith, a course of three terms at the Cambridge Law School. He received his LL.B. in July, 1866, and in the fall was admitted to the bar. Commissioned as Justice of the Peace, February 8, 1867. He is now practising his profession at No. 35, Court Street, Boston.

CHARLES EDWARD HICKLING, son of Charles and Eliza B. (Edes) Hickling, was born in Roxbury, April 24, 1841. Fitted for College with Mr. T. G. Bradford, of Boston. In September, 1862, he went into camp at Readville, as sergeant in the 45th Massachusetts Regiment. November 10, the regiment sailed for Beaufort, N.C., where they arrived on the 14th. After taking an active part in General Foster's expedition to Goldsboro', Hickling was seized with the malaria fever; and after remaining six or seven weeks in hospital, with no apparent chance of his recovering, his father brought him to Boston. There he slowly recovered, but with a paralysis of his lower extremities. In October, he went to Fayal, where, and at St. Michael's, he has since resided, somewhat benefited. He has lately returned home, improved in health.

* JOHN HODGES, son of John and Mary Osgood (Deland) Hodges, was born in Salem, Mass., December 8, 1841. He was fitted for College at the Salem High School, and entered in July, 1858. In April, 1861, he left College to go with his Company (the Salem Zouaves) to the defence of Washington. After his return, in August, he was commissioned as first lieutenant in the 19th Massachusetts Volunteers. In the summer of 1862, he was compelled by sickness and exhaustion to leave the army for a while. November 8, 1862, was commissioned as Major of 50th Massachusetts Volunteers. After the return of this regiment from Port Hudson, in the fall of 1863, he again went into the field as Lieutenant-colonel of 59th Massachusetts Volunteers. At the battle before Petersburg, July 30, 1864, he was severely wounded, soon after the explosion of the mine, and was killed by another shot while in the crater of the fort. Fletcher was wounded, and Bartlett taken prisoner, in this same action. Hodges' body was buried in the fort where he fell.

At the annual meeting of the Class, held at Cambridge on Commencement Day, July 19, 1865, the Secretary having announced the death of brother John Hodges, it was —

"Resolved, That, in the death of John Hodges, we have lost a friend and a brother whose worth cannot be estimated in words, but who has left to us a record of unassuming manliness, conscientious patriotism, and simple, earnest devotion to the cause of truth.

"That we recognize, in the cheerful perseverance which led him again and again to offer himself to his country's service, the same faithful obedience to the call of duty which has made so many of the sons of Harvard immortal.

"That we claim for him a high place on the roll of her illustrious dead; and that his early death on the field of battle was a fitting close to a short but glorious career of modest heroism and manly self-devotion.

"That, while we offer our warmest sympathy to the family which has suffered with us in his death, we would also share with them the remembrance of his noble, self-sacrificing life.

FREDERICK LUCIAN HOSMER, son of Charles and Susan (Carter) Hosmer, was born in Framingham, Mass., Friday, October 16, 1840. Fitted for College in the Framingham High School. The winter before entering College, Hosmer taught school in Lancaster, Mass.; and again, in the same place, during the Sophomore winter, at Sudbury during the Junior, and at Bolton during the Senior vacations.

On leaving College, he became Master of the Houghton High School, in Bolton, Mass., remaining there until July 9, 1864, when he was elected Master of the Adams School, Dorchester. In July, 1866, he resigned this position, and entered the Cambridge Divinity School in September.

JOHN ELBRIDGE HUDSON, son of John and Elizabeth C. (Hilliard) Hudson, was born in Lynn, Mass., August 3, 1839.

After graduating from the Lynn High School, he studied by himself, preparatory to the College Examination. In 1862 and 1863, he was Tutor of Greek and Latin Languages and Ancient Geography, at Cambridge, taking also a regular course at the Law School. In 1866, he was in the office of Messrs. Chandler, Shattuck, & Thayer, No. 4, Court Street, Boston; and in the fall of that year was admitted to the Massachusetts Bar. He is now a counsellor-at-law, at No. 4, Court Street, Boston.

FREDERICK WOLTERS HUIDEKOPER, son of Edgar and Frances (Shippen) Huidekoper, was born at Meadville, Penn., September 12, 1840. Fitted for College, with private tutors, at his native town, and entered College in March, 1858. In the fall of 1862, he was a captain in the Pennsylvania Six-months Volunteers. He was the next year in business at Meadville. January 22, 1867, he married Virginia Christie, of Erie, Penn., daughter of the late Fitz James Christie, Esq. He is now, with his brother, engaged in manufacturing at Meadville.

HENRY SHIPPEN HUIDEKOPER, son of Edgar and Frances (Shippen) Huidekoper, was born at Meadville, July 17, 1839. Entered College, with his brother, in March, 1858. In September, 1862, he was lieutenant-colonel of the 150th Pennsylvania Volunteers. He lost an arm at the battle of Gettysburg. February 22, 1864, he was commissioned colonel, and, March 5, was discharged, on account of disability from wounds. October 26, 1864, he married Emma S. Evans, daughter of Thomas Wallis Evans, Esq., of Philadelphia. He is now in business at Meadville.

HENRY UPHAM JEFFRIES, son of Dr. John and Ann Geyer (Amory) Jeffries, was born in Boston, December 7, 1840. Fitted for College at the Boston Latin School. For a time after graduation, he was in business in Boston. He then went into the house of Russell & Stargis, at Manilla, where he was, at last reports, doing exceedingly well.

DERMOT WARBURTON KEEGAN, was born in Boston, Mass., August 28, 1841.

In October, 1862, he went to Berlin, Prussia, to study civil law. Was matriculated in the University there, and studied about five months, when his health compelled him to desist from mental labor, and travel through Europe. After an absence of fifteen months, he returned to Boston, and renewed his law studies; but, after two years spent in recruiting his health, he relinquished all hopes of pursuing his chosen profession, and became a partner in the house of Messrs. Perkins, Livingston, & Post, dealers in railroad iron and general machinists' supplies, Memphis, Tenn. Keegan is in a branch house at Cincinnati, Ohio, No. 47, West Front Street.

CHARLES PARKE KEMP, son of Hiram A. and Mary (Peaslee) Kemp, was born in Boston, July 17, 1840. At the Boston Latin School, where he fitted for College, he received a prize for a poetical composition in Latin verse. In September, 1862, Kemp entered the Harvard Medical School. He was for a year house physician at the City Hospital, and is now practising his profession in Boston.

JEROME HENRY KIDDER, son of Camillus and —— (Herrick) Kidder, was born in Baltimore, October 26, 1842. In September, 1862, he was superintending plantations at Port Royal. From June 16, 1863, to January 31, 1864, he was a private in the 10th Maryland Volunteer Infantry. October 24, 1864, he was a hospital steward, United-States Army. July, 1866, an engineer in the United-States Navy.

EDWIN AUGUSTUS LECOMPTE was born in Boston, September 14, 1835. In August, 1848, he received a Franklin Medal at the Mayhew School, and entered the English High School. In February, 1852, he went into the store of Messrs. Little, Brown, & Co., booksellers, where he remained six years. In July, 1853, he joined the Harvard-street Baptist Church; and, from this time, a sense of duty turned his thoughts towards the ministry. His spare moments were devoted to the study of Latin and other studies preparatory to a College course; and in September,

Lecompte was the unanimous choice of the Class for chaplain; an honor his whole College course had justly entitled him to.

July 24, 1862, he married Frances Eliza Draper, at Windsor, Conn., and, in August of the same year, was ordained pastor of the Fourth-street Baptist Church, at South Boston. This parish has greatly increased under his ministry; and his chapel has been replaced by a much larger church edifice. With all these outward signs of success, he has the truer comfort of feeling that his congregation is becoming spiritually stronger.

November 10, 1865, a son, Frank Edwin, was born.

EDWARD DELANO LINDSEY, son of Henry and Susan Maxfield (Kempton) Lindsey, was born in New Bedford, March 30, 1841. Fitted at schools in his native city. On graduating, he entered the School of Fine Arts at Paris, where he remained until July, 1865, when he entered the office of Mr. N. J. Bradlee, architect, in Boston. The next year, he went to New York, where he is now practising his profession.

JAMES MILTON LORING, son of Charles E. and Mary (Young) Loring, was born near St. Louis, Mo., May 16, 1840. Fitted at the High School of his native city. In the fall of 1862, he began law studies in the office of Glover & Shepley, St. Louis. In October, 1863, he was admitted to the bar; and was connected with the "St. Louis Union, and Missouri Republican." In October, 1864, he was married. He is now practising law in St. Louis.

HENRY HORTON McBURNEY was born in Roxbury, Mass., February 8, 1843. Fitted for College at a private Latin school, under the instruction of Mr. A. H. Buck, and entered Harvard without conditions. During the second term, Sophomore, McBurney was stroke-oar in the Class boat, pulling, that year, in four races: one on the 17th of June, beating the "Union," six-oar, at Charlestown, in 14 minutes 23 seconds, on a two-mile course; one on the 4th of July, beating the "Freshman, '63," the "Shamrock," and others, on Charles River, in 19 minutes 21 seconds, on a three-mile course; and two at Worcester, on the 24th and 25th of July, when the Class crew were victorious over the "Glyuna," the Yale Sophomore boat, the challenger, in 20 minutes 14 seconds, in three miles, the first day; and over the "Glyuna" again, and the '63 boat, in 19 minutes 44 seconds, on the same course, the second day.

At the end of the Junior year, McBurney made a short trip to Europe; visiting Ireland, England, Switzerland, and Paris. At the end of the Senior year, he was chosen our chief-marshal. In September, 1862, he went to Paris, and studied chemistry for one year with Wurtz, in the Ecole de Medicine; thence to Heidelberg, where he studied with Bunsen another year; returning to Boston in 1864. He then went into business with his father, Mr. Charles McBurney, until November, 1866, when he became a partner in the firm of Campbell, Whittier, & Co., in this city.

January 16, 1867, he married Susan Sturgis, of Roxbury, and is now living in Roxbury.

EDWARD WILLIAM McCABE, son of Edmund Hudson and Elizabeth Tilghman (Farish) McCabe, born March 7, 1840, at St. Louis, Mo., where he lived until entering College. In November, 1862, McCabe commenced the study of law in the office of Judge Krum, of St. Louis, where he remained until September, 1864, when he entered the office of his cousin, Mr. Farish, where he remained a year longer. In December, 1865, he opened a law office with his brother, F. X. McCabe.

EDWARD DORR McCARTHY, son of Henry R. and —— McCarthy, was born at Florida, N.Y., November 24, 1839. In 1862, he was a teacher at Provincetown, Mass. In 1863 and 1864, he attended the Law School in Cambridge, and was admitted to the New-York bar in May, 1865. He is now practising law in New York.

HERBERT COWPLAND MASON, son of Jonathan and Isabella Cowpland (Weyman) Mason, born in Boston, June 1, 1840. Fitted for College with Professors Lane and Lovering. He received a commission in the 20th Massachusetts Infantry, November 25, 1861, and left College to join his regiment at Poolesville, on the Potomac. July 4, 1862, he returned home for a few weeks, as he was very ill with the malarial fever; but rejoined his regiment, in Sedgwick's division, 2d Corps, in time for the battle of Chantilly and the covering of Pope's retreat. He was promoted to a captaincy. At Gettysburg, July 3, 1863, Mason was severely wounded; and in the spring of 1864, finding that the injury received was of such a nature as to disqualify him for further service, and that the disability was likely to be permanent, he resigned, and was honorably discharged, March 23. March 1, 1867, he entered the counting-room of Lawrence & Co., 17, Milk Street, where he now is.

HENRY MATHES was born at Portsmouth, N.H., September 4, 1839. Since graduating, has made various excursions to the White Mountains, Bay of Fundy, and other places, mostly on the coast. Is now studying medicine with Dr. Coleman, of Portsmouth.

BENJAMIN CROWNINSHIELD MIFFLIN, son of Charles and Mary (Crowninshield) Mifflin, born in Boston, December 7, 1839. He studied for some time in Paris, returning to this country in 1855, and fitted for College with Professor Lane. November, 1862, he was an adjutant in the Massachusetts 49th. Since 1865, he has been a member of the firm of Ballou & Mifflin, brokers, Boston.

ARTHUR HOWARD NICHOLS, son of John P. and Mary A. (Clark) Nichols, was born in Boston, September 9, 1840. Prepared for College at the Boston Latin School. September, 1862, he entered the Harvard Medical School. In the fall of 1863, Nichols went to Europe, to pursue his medical studies in Paris, returning the next year, and entering the Massachusetts General Hospital. In 1866, he returned to Paris, and is still abroad.

CHARLES HUME NOYES, son of Charles and Helen (Hume) Noyes, born at Eastport, Me., April 4, 1840. Fitted at the High School of his native town. In July, 1864, he was in business in Chicago.

FRANCIS CUSHING NYE, son of Tristram and Sarah W. (Jenney) Nye, was born in New Bedford, August 2, 1840. Fitted for College at Phillips Exeter Academy, and entered Sophomore. In September, 1862, he was secretary of the South Congregational Church (Unitarian), Boston; and in July, 1864, was studying law in New York. The next year, he was admitted to the bar, and is now practising law in New York.

* ARTHUR CORTLANDT PARKER, son of William and Lucy C. (Whitwell) Parker, was born in Boston, October 21, 1840. His early life was spent in Boston and Newton until 1848, when his parents removed to Baltimore, and again to Boston in 1853, and to Chicago in 1859. Parker graduated at the English High School in 1857, and at the Boston Latin School in 1858; receiving at these schools four prizes for Latin and English verses, and for mathematics.

Entering Harvard with the Class, he left at the end of six months, and went to Chicago, rejoining us in September, 1861. July 21, 1862, Parker enlisted as private in the 33d Massachusetts Volunteers, and was appointed orderly sergeant. March 3, 1863, he was commissioned second lieutenant, and attached to General Meade's staff. On the night of August 24, Parker visited his old regiment, which was near head-quarters; he left them to return, but never arrived. A year passed away before his fate was explained. A Lieutenant Ranney was captured, shortly after Parker's disappearance, by a party of guerillas who were professedly Union men, and had been frequently seen about the camp. Both, it seems, were captured in the same place, about two miles below Bristow station on the Orange and Alexandria Railroad, in a low, densely wooded spot, where the pickets, who were stationed along the track every quarter of a mile, never ventured. While they were searching his boots and clothes, Lieutenant Ranney was looking round to see if there was any chance of escape. One of the guerillas said to him, "Don't do that, young man, or we will serve you the same as we lately did a young Yankee officer on General Meade's staff. He did just as you are trying to do; and we shot him while attempting to escape, and buried him on the spot." The date of the occurrence, and the description given Lieutenant Ranney, convinced his family that the "young Yankee officer" was no other than Arthur Parker. He left camp about 5 o'clock, P.M., August 24, 1863. His brother writes, "Arthur several times expressed a wish to be shot and killed instantly, rather than to be wounded and taken prisoner."

At the Class meeting on July 19, 1865, it was by the Class —

"Resolved, That, in the death of Arthur Cortlandt Parker, we have lost one of the best and brightest of our number, whose strength of will, firmness of purpose, and unwonted perseverance in grasping the difficulties of a student's life, gave us all expectations which were more than realized in his career as a soldier and patriot.

"That, with us always so brave and generous, a wider field most fully displayed those high qualities for command and respect which he possessed, and which so distinguished him as an officer for daring, coolness, and bravery.

"That in him we recognize those sterling qualities of mind which would equally bring him the honors which are to be obtained by the true soldier in war, or the true scholar in peace: honest and upright in his character, ever true to his principles, we recognize, in the manner of his death, the spirit of unfaltering devotion which led him to prefer a soldier's death in arms to the lingering tortures of a Southern prison. To the mother and her family, while we would rejoice with them, that, after their long suspense, his fate is now definitely known, we would tender our heartfelt sympathy in this their great affliction."

GILBERT RUSSELL PAYSON, son of Samuel R. and —— (Cushing) Payson, was born in Boston, May 11, 1840. He fitted for College at Mr. Dixwell's school. August 2, 1862, he entered the employ of Messrs. J. C. Howe & Co., domestic commission merchants, 51, Franklin Street, Boston, devoting his attention especially to printed goods, and on January 1, 1867, was received into the firm. June 12, 1867, he married Althea, daughter of Hon. Charles R. Train, of Framingham, Mass., and is living at Watertown.

ROBERT SINGLETON PEABODY, son of Jeremiah D. and Ellen M. (Hanna) Peabody, was born near Zanesville, Ohio, June 12, 1837. Fitted at Phillips Andover Academy, and delivered the Valedictory there, entering Harvard in 1857 with the Class of 1861, but, owing to sickness, joined the Class of 1862 next year. In 1864 Peabody graduated from the Harvard Law School, and settled in Rutland, Vt. November 7, 1866, he married Margaret A. Goddard, of Zanesville. He is now practising law at Rutland.

CHARLES BURNHAM PORTER, son of Dr. James B. and Harriet (Griggs) Porter, born in Rutland, Vt., January 19, 1840. Fitted for College in the schools of his native town. In the winter of 1857, he joined the Rutland Baptist Church. Inheriting a musical as well as a medical talent, he furnished much of the vocal element in the College Choir, and Harvard Musical Societies.

On leaving College, Porter entered the Harvard Medical School. June 15, 1865, he married Hattie A. Allen in Cambridge. In July was acting assistant surgeon United-States Army, attached to the Armory-square Hospital, Washington, D.C. February 8, 1866, was appointed district physician of the Boston Dispensary. September 9, 1866, a son, Charles Allen Porter, was born to him. September 17, he was appointed Assistant Demonstrator of Anatomy in the Medical Department of Harvard University. He is now surgeon to the "out-patients" in the Massachusetts General Hospital, and resides in Boston. October 13, was appointed one of the physicians at the Central Office of the Dispensary.

NATHANIEL APPLETON PRENTISS, son of Nathaniel Appleton and Abigail Welsh (Payson) Prentiss, was born at Andover, Mass., on the 20th of August, 1840. His preparatory studies were commenced with Rev. S. A. Smith, of West Cambridge, and completed at the Phillips Exeter Academy. After graduating, Prentiss went to New York, where he studied law at the Law School of Columbia College. He then studied in several offices, and was admitted to the New-York Bar. He is now practising in New York, and writes as follows: "I have held, and am now holding, the offices of notary public and commissioner for Massachusetts, which latter function I could hardly recommend to one in search of an office of emolument, however great may be the honor derived therefrom."

GEORGE EATON PRIEST, son of Sylvester and Cynthia (Eaton) Priest, was born in Watertown, Mass., January 30, 1842. He fitted for College at the Watertown High School. In the fall of 1862, he enlisted as private in the 53d regiment, Massachusetts Volunteers, and served during the Port-Hudson campaign; was mustered out with the regiment in September, 1863. November, 1863, he was commissioned as first lieutenant and regimental quartermaster of the 57th Massachusetts (Bartlett's regiment), and served during the campaign before Richmond, and until August, 1865, when the war had ended, and the regiment was mustered out of service. During the winter of 1865 and 1866, he was a book-keeper in Boston. May, 1866, he entered the firm of Kinney & Priest, lumber-dealers, in Boston, in which business he still continues. He was married September 30, 1866, to Mary Wallis Whittier, daughter of the late Joseph Whittier, Esq., of Sidney, Me.

EDWARD DORR PRITCHARD, son of William and Elizabeth D. (Knapp) Pritchard, was born at Newburyport, Mass., March 3, 1838. His preparatory studies were conducted at the schools in that city. In 1863 and 1864, he was Principal of the High School at Fitchburg, Mass. In 1865, and when last heard from, was in business at Newburyport.

HENRY PARKER QUINCY, son of Edmund and Lucilla Pinckney (Parker) Quincy, was born in Boston, October 28, 1838; but, in 1840, his father removed to Dedham, Mass., where he has since resided. Quincy studied with Messrs. C. J. Capen, E. S. Dixwell, and John D. Bryant, before entering College; and, during a portion of the Junior and the Senior year, studied Art with Mr. Henry Hitchings. On Class Day, his services as marshal were appreciated by the Class Committee. During 1863–1864, he studied medicine with Professor J. Wyman, at Cambridge, and then continued his course at the Harvard Medical School. The last year, he has been house surgeon at the Massachusetts General Hospital. Received the degree of M.D. in 1867. He is now in Europe.

JOHN READ, son of William and Sallie G. (Atkins) Read, was born in Cambridge, May 19, 1840. Fitted for College at the Cambridge High School. In the Sophomore year, Read was one of the famous crew who beat the Yale Sophomores at Worcester, and achieved the first great triumph of the Class. Three times more that year, this crew pulled in competition, and were uniformly victorious. November 7, 1862, he entered the United-States Navy as acting assistant paymaster, and, the next April, was attached to the iron-clad "Keokuk," which was sunk by shot from Fort Sumter. In July, attached to the United-States gunboat "Granite City," of the West Gulf Squadron. After nearly a year of blockading and fighting, he was taken prisoner in an engagement at Calcasieu Pass, La., and for nearly eight months kept a prisoner in rebel stockades. Of the one hundred and eleven men captured with him, seventy-nine died in prison, the victims of the usual rebel barbarity. December 19, 1864, Read was released, and March 9, 1865, attached to the United-States steamer "Kearsarge;" on the 18th of the same month, he resigned, on account of ill-health. October 17, 1866, he married Elise H. Welch, of West Newton, Mass. He is now a member of the firm of Messrs. William Read & Sons, of Boston, and lives in West Newton.

ARTHUR REED, son of Caleb and Mary E. (Minot) Reed, was born in Boston, August 13, 1841. Fitted for College at the Boston Latin School. In August, 1862, he was quartermaster's sergeant, 45th Massachusetts Volunteers. In the fall of 1863, he went into business in Boston. October 28, 1866, he was married to Elizabeth H. Webster, in the Swedenborgian Church, in Boston, and then sailed for Europe.

JOSEPH SAMPSON REED, son of Sampson and Catherine (Clark) Reed, was born in Boston, December 13, 1841. Fitted at the Boston Latin School. In 1862, he was a superintendent at Port Royal; in 1863, a clerk at Chicago. July, 1864, he was at Boston; and has since been on a plantation in South Carolina.

FREDERIC WILLIAM ROGERS, son of Octavius T. and —— (Trask) Rogers, was born in Milton, Mass., May 15, 1840. Fitted at the Milton Academy. The last term of the Senior year, he was absent from College, owing to a severe illness. Since 1863, he has been in business in Boston.

HENRY MUNROE ROGERS, son of John H. and Lucy C. (Smith) Rogers, was born in Boston on the 27th of February, 1839. Attended the Adams Grammar School in Mason Street, Boston, for a number of years, and, in 1852, entered the English High School, where he remained one year, and then went to the Public Latin School, where he prepared for College. On November 5, 1862, was appointed an acting assistant paymaster in the navy, and was immediately ordered to duty on blockade, off Wilmington, attached to the steamer "Daylight;" subsequently transferred to the "Ascutney," and afterwards to the "Wilderness." Left the service, November 20, 1865. Entered the Law School at Cambridge, September 30, 1865, while on three months' leave of absence, and continued there, after leaving the navy, until April 23, 1867. On the first of April, entered the law office of Messrs. Brooks & Ball, No. 40, State Street, Boston, where he is at the present time.

*HENRY ROPES, son of William and Mary Ann (Codman) Ropes, was born near London, England, where his parents were temporarily residing, May 16, 1839. He was fitted for College by Sidney Willard, Esq. (H. C. 1852). November 25, 1861, he was commissioned second lieutenant of the Massachusetts 20th, and as first lieutenant October 2, 1862. Ropes was with the regiment through the Peninsular campaign, — siege of Yorktown, Fair Oaks, Seven Days' battle, Antietam, storming of Fredericksburg, and was never wounded until he met his death at Gettysburg, July 3, 1863.

At the annual meeting of the Class at Cambridge, on Commencement Day, 1863, it was —

"Resolved, Since it has pleased Almighty God to withdraw from us our classmate Henry Ropes; —

"We would express our deep sense of our loss in the death of one whose character commanded the honor and respect of all. His genial qualities made him a favorite; yet to them were united, in an unusual degree, a rare sense of justice, a constant self-denial, an earnest yet liberal belief, and a most fervent patriotism.

"We mourn for the loss of a generous friend, a high-souled gentleman, a Christian soldier and patriot, and cherish his memory as one of our richest possessions. To his family we offer our most heartfelt sympathy."

(See Harvard Memorial Biographies.)

CHARLES SPRAGUE SARGENT, son of Ignatius and Henrietta (Grey) Sargent, was born in Boston, April 24, 1841. Fitted chiefly at Mr. E. S. Dixwell's school. In November, 1862, he was first lieutenant on General Banks's staff; in July, 1864, a captain. In July, 1866, was in Europe, travelling.

EDWARD BABCOCK SAWTELL, son of Charles and Ruth J. (Fairbanks) Sawtell, was born in Fitchburg, Mass., September 26, 1840. Fitted at the Leicester Academy, Mass. In 1863, Sawtell was at Beaufort, S.C., where he remained several years. In 1866, he was a law student at Fitchburg.

ARTHUR SIBLEY, son of Stephen and Anna (Emerson) Sibley, born at Chelsea, Mass., April 9, 1840. Fitted for College at the High School in his native town. During his College life, Sibley contributed much to the reputation of the Class in boating, as bow-oar of the Class crew. After serving as an acting assistant paymaster in the Mississippi squadron, from November, 1862, to October, 1865, Sibley bought a steamboat, and had her ply between New Orleans and the mouth of the river. After the New-Orleans riot, he returned to Chelsea, and went into business with his father, manufacturing woollens. While in the service, he was present at the running of the Vicksburg blockade, at the Red-River expedition, and the Arkansas-Post fight.

FRANCIS SKINNER, son of Francis and Elizabeth (Cochran) Skinner, was born in Boston, September 3, 1840. Fitted at Mr. E. S. Dixwell's school. After graduation, Skinner was for a time superintendent of his father's factories at Lewiston, Me., and then went into business with his father. In 1866, he was in Europe, travelling.

CHARLES CARROLL SOULE, son of Richard and —— (Winsor) Soule, was born in Boston, June 25, 1842. Studied for a while at the Boston Latin School, and then at the Brookline High School. While a Freshman, he was a collaborator on Worcester's Dictionary. In 1861, he was one of the party of students engaged in the "River Observations," at Concord, Mass. Near the end of his College course, he became captain in the 33d Massachusetts Regiment, but was not mustered into the United-States service. As the regiment filled up very slowly, he left it in July, and went to South Carolina, to oversee plantations. Hearing of the formation of the 44th Massachusetts Regiment, he came on to Boston, and joined it as a private, in October. Three weeks after, he was commissioned second lieutenant in Company B. When the term of service expired, he joined the 55th Massachusetts as captain of Company K, and remained with it through the war. At the battle of Honey Hill, S.C., he received a slight flesh-wound in the arm. From May until August, 1865, he was provost judge and superintendent of freedmen, in South Carolina. The following winter he spent in Charleston, in the real-estate agency business, returning in April. The next month, he became a clerk with Messrs. Little, Brown, & Co., in Boston, where he may now be found.

JAMES HENRY STEARNS, born at Hancock, N.H., January 9, 1841. Fitted for College in various places, roaming through the West. Entered College, in 1856, as Sophomore. In 1857, he joined the Baptist Church at Racine, Wis. In July, 1864, he was principal of a young ladies' school in Wisconsin. Since July, 1865, he has been in Chicago, Ill., in the Union Telegraph office.

CHARLES BRIGHAM STODDARD, son of Isaac Nelson and Martha LeBaron (Thomas) Stoddard, was born at Plymouth, Mass., January 4, 1842. Fitted at Phillips Exeter Academy, and entered College as Sophomore. October, 1862, Stoddard was quartermaster in the 41st Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers; August 13, 1863, captain in the 3d Cavalry; and, in 1866, was at Plymouth, in business.

* GOODWIN ATKINS STONE, son of Jacob and Eliza (Atkins) Stone, was born in Newburyport, Mass., July 12, 1841. When fifteen years old, Stone joined the Unitarian Church. He fitted for College at Dummer Academy, Byfield, and entered Harvard without conditions. He took a high rank the first term Freshman, and gained one of the Thayer scholarships; Junior year, his rank entitled him to a State scholarship and his detur: parts at exhibitions and Commencement, he did not consider of sufficient importance to mention in his autobiography. When he graduated, he took a school at Concord, Mass. April 14, 1863, he was commissioned lieutenant in the 2d Massachusetts Cavalry. March 25, 1864, he was promoted to a captaincy in the same regiment. July 6, 1864, he was severely wounded at the battle of Ahlie's Station, Va.; and died, in the hospital at Washington, of his wounds, July 18, 1864.

At a meeting of the Class, the following tribute of affection and respect was adopted: —

"We, the classmates of Captain Stone, wish to offer a public expression of regret for his loss and regard for his character, — a character which united the extremes of earnest religious belief and most liberal tolerance, of daring bravery and perfect purity of mind.

"Unselfish, modest, religious, with a fine intellect and genial manners, he lived the noble life of a Christian gentleman and soldier, and died a noble sacrifice to a noble cause.

"His life read a daily lesson of strength, cheerfulness, and faith to all who knew him; and the sublime courage of his last days, the imperturbability of mind, which never left him, either when surrounded by the enemy or when waiting for death, and calmly cheering those around him, must touch every heart.

"We would offer to his family our admiration and respect for their noble son and brother, and our sympathy for their loss."

(See Harvard Memorial Biographies.)

GEORGE GROSVENOR TARBELL was born September 9, 1841, in Lincoln, Mass., where his father, Mr. C. L. Tarbell, resides. Fitted for College at Phillips Exeter Academy. Immediately after graduation, he commenced the study of medicine in the Harvard Medical School. During his studies here, he was appointed house surgeon of the Massachusetts General Hospital. In April, 1865, he entered the army as assistant surgeon, and afterwards surgeon, of the 3d Massachusetts Cavalry. In May, 1866, he commenced the practice of his profession in Hingham, Mass., where he now resides.

BENJAMIN HOLT TICKNOR, son of William D. and Emeline S. (Holt) Ticknor, born in Boston, August 3, 1842. In 1847, he removed to Jamaica Plain, where he attended the public schools until 1853, when he entered the Chauncy-Hall School, in Boston. February 8, 1862, Ticknor sailed for Ship Island, as assistant quartermaster, on the transport "Idaho," and made land on Cat Island, where the vessel stuck several days. He returned on the "Constitution," touching at Havana and Fortress Monroe. In July, 1862, he entered the employ of Messrs. Ticknor & Fields; and, in August, enlisted in the 45th Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers. September 15, he was commissioned second lieutenant, Company G, and mustered into service on the 26th. When the regiment was ordered to Newbern, in November, he was unwell, and was left in command of the men who were also detained by sickness. Rejoining the regiment in December, his company was detached to garrison Fort Macon, until May, 1863; and he was then commissioned as second lieutenant in the 2d Regiment Heavy Artillery, and sent home in June to recruit. In August, he was commissioned captain, Company E, and put in command of the recruiting camp at Readville. In October, he again went to Newbern, resigning April 17, 1864. On June 8, 1865, he was married by the Rev. E. B. Webb, D.D., to Caroline C. Cushman, daughter of Mr. Freeman L. Cushman, of Boston. Soon after, a branch of Messrs. Ticknor & Fields was established in New York, and Ticknor took charge of it. September 1, 1866, Caroline Ticknor was born.

FREDERIC WILLIAM TILTON, son of Benjamin and Lucinda (Newell) Tilton, was born May 14, 1839, at Cambridgeport. Tilton graduated in the English department of the Cambridge High School in 1854, and entered the counting-room of his brothers, who are engaged in the lumber business, in Boston, where he remained nearly two years. He then returned to the High School, and prepared for College. He went abroad, in 1862, with our lamented Chapman; and, after travelling in England, Scotland, and Ireland, went to Göttingen, where he studied nearly an academic year. Soon after his return, in the summer of 1863, he was appointed instructor of Latin and mathematics at the Highland Military Academy, in Worcester, Mass., where he remained three years. In January, 1867, he was elected superintendent of the public schools of Newport, R.I., which office he now holds.

July 21, 1864, he was married to Ellen Trowbridge, of Cambridge; February 24, 1867, a son, William Frederic, was born.

*JABEZ NELSON TRASK. "Born at 9, P.M., 19th of October, 1831, in Freedom, Waldo County, Me., I was carried from that town when three months old, and have not been in it since." His early life was passed in the backwoods of Maine in pioneer warfare. With much hard work and little encouragement, he came at last to Waterville, Me. He completed his preparatory studies at Phillips Exeter Academy, and entered Harvard the Sophomore year.

He was one year in South Carolina, one year a resident graduate at Cambridge, and has completed a course of theology at the Cambridge Divinity School.

JOHN HARVEY TREAT, son of J. A. Treat (H. C. 1832), was born at Pittsfield, N.H., July 23, 1839. He entered the Academy at Andover, Mass., in the fall of 1856, and graduated in 1858. He says, "As chance would have it, I stood in the first half, and, as a penalty, was obliged to deliver an Oration on George Stephenson." Since graduating, Treat has been in business with his father in Lawrence, selling manufacturers' supplies. He speaks with great delight of various excursions into the woods of Maine, long pulls on the rivers in a canoe of his own construction; and those of his classmates in this neighborhood know, that, whenever a rare old book is in the market, Treat scents it afar. He has made a collection of more than two hundred volumes of antiquated literature.

JOHN MORTON TUCKE, son of Edward and Emily (Coburn) Tucke, born at Lowell, Mass., May 3, 1840. Fitted for College at the Lowell High School. He always desired to go to sea, but yielded to his father's wishes, and came to College. In January, 1863, he began business as clerk for Messrs. Wilson, Hamilton, & Co., Boston, where he remained three years, and then became a partner of Messrs. Hall, Dame, & Bullock, and resides in Chicago, Ill.

* JOHN HENRY TUCKER, son of Ebenezer and Eliza Bradly (Foster) Tucker, was born in Cambridge, February 19, 1835. In 1849, Tucker entered the Cambridge High School, and in May, 1850, joined the Old-Cambridge Baptist Church. In 1851, his father wished him to learn a trade, and he was apprenticed to his brother, a carriage-painter: the drudgery of a beginner was distasteful to him, but he determined to be contented; and, when he came of age, he was at once offered a good situation, so satisfactory was his workmanship. In 1855, he became a member of the Mechanic Apprentices' Library Association; and so well did he profit by the literary advantages here offered, that, at the end of nine months, he was chosen to deliver the address on the thirty-sixth anniversary of that society, which he did on the 22d of February, 1856, in the Meionaon. This address was printed. The next July, he commenced his studies for a college course; at first by himself, but finally at the Cambridge High School.

Tucker was killed at the attack on Port Hudson, Miss., May 27, 1863, at the age of twenty-eight. Devoting himself to the study of theology, and to the ministry of the Baptist Church, which he joined thirteen years before, he felt that his country needed him in a service in every way opposed to his tastes, but in one where he might yet do good; he joined the 38th Massachusetts Regiment as a private, and fell among the first in the attack.

His brother, George T. Tucker, was with him in the regiment, and died a few months after of wounds received in battle. Their bodies were brought home by the Irving Literary Association, and the Rev. C. W. Anable preached a Funeral Discourse on May 8, 1864, which has been printed.

The following resolves were passed at a Class meeting on Commencement 1863: —

"Resolved, That, as a Class, we recognize this warning that we are not to live always, and this example of a noble and patriotic death.

"While we feel deeply our loss, we rejoice that we have known a life so pure, a devotion so untiring, and a death so glorious. The stern adherence to right, through whatever obstacles, which was so prominent in his College life, called him from the quiet studies of theology to a short but eager fight for his country, and an early death. His life has been an example to many, and his death has added honor to his life.

"Resolved, That these expressions of esteem for our classmate, and sorrow for his early death, be communicated to his family."

JOHN LANGDON WARD, son of William R. L. and Sophia A. (Langdon) Ward, born in Buffalo, N.Y., October 25, 1841. Fitted for College at Salem and Portsmouth. April 18, 1861, Ward left Boston with the Salem Zouaves, to which company he belonged. The Zouaves were attached to the 8th Regiment, Massachusetts Volunteers, the regiment that opened the way to Washington, via Annapolis. The Zouaves brought the old frigate "Constitution" to New York from Annapolis, and, returning to Washington, were the first to enter that city by water after the war broke out. In September, 1861, Ward returned to College.

After graduation, Ward began to study law in Salem, Mass. Was commissioned captain in the 50th Regiment, Massachusetts Volunteers; major of 3d Infantry, Corps d'Afrique, on General Andrews's staff, at Port Hudson, and resigned July 21, 1865. He then resumed the study of law, and is now a practising attorney in New York.

CHARLES PICKARD WARE, son of Rev. Henry and Mary Lovell (Pickard) Ware, was born in Cambridge, June 11, 1840. Fitted for College at Mr. E. S. Dixwell's school, in Boston. From July, 1862, to April, 1865, Ware was at Port Royal, S.C., superintending plantations on St. Helena Island; the first season in the employ of the United States. May, 1865, he commenced to read law in Boston, and in February, 1866, continued his studies at the Dane Law School, in Cambridge. He now resides in Milton, and opens a school for boys in Boston the coming fall.

WILLIAM TUCKER WASHBURN, son of W. R. P. and Susan (Tucker) Washburn; born August 15, 1841, at Boston, Mass. Fitted for College at the Boston Latin School. In 1862, Washburn entered his father's office to study law. In 1863, he went to the Harvard Law School, where he remained a year, and then studied and practised his profession in Boston until 1865, when he went to New York. In 1866 he was in the oil-regions of Pennsylvania. He is now in New York, practising law in partnership with Hazeltine.

JOHN EATON WHITING, son of Eaton and Olive (Smith) Whiting, was born in West Dedham, Mass., Monday, May 4, 1840. Fitted at the High School in Dedham. After graduation, he went to his farm, where he remained nearly three years. In July, 1865, he was Secretary of the Bunker-Hill Fire Insurance Company, at Charlestown. Since then he has been travelling.

WILLIAM GRIGGS WILSON, son of Edward Chase and Emmeline (Griggs) Wilson, was born in Springfield, Mass., March 4, 1843. Fitted for College at the High School in Brookline, Mass. In the fall of 1862, he entered the Dane Law School, receiving the degree of LL.B. in 1864. He then went to New York, where he is now a counsellor-at-law.
